THE P-TOWN HAPS

How's the summer treating everyone? Before you answer with a heat-related complaint, I'd like to remind you that we're officially in what's historically the hottest month of the year around these parts. Moreover, this summer is nothing compared to what we endured four short years ago, when we set a record temperature of 116 degrees during the infamous "heat dome." Those are Vegas temperatures, folks, and not to be bested for quite some time! So, enjoy the nice weather while you can, and when it becomes too much, there's always a fabulous, air-conditioned industry establishment to cool you down.

By the way, did you notice the absolute hottie on the left-hand page? We were lucky enough to get a visit from our January 2023 Exotic Covergirl and Miss Exotic Oregon 2023, Nia, and she's still as amazing and stunning as ever. We miss you and hope to see you again soon! ♥

It's birthday time...and we have four this month! Kicking things off, we have a 2-for-1 for you. It's Eris and Belladonna's Circus Birthday Party on Saturday, August 16, at Guilty Pleasures. Also on Saturday, August 16, it's Rosie's 25th Birthday Party. Then, on Friday, August 22, it's Kat Van Dayum's Birthday Party at Kit Kat Club. Wrapping up birthdays this month is Phoenix's Wild Wild West Birthday Party at Devils Point on Sunday, August 31. Happy Birthday from Exotic, ladies!

We also have a strip club birthday this month. Happy 24th anniversary to DV8! Make sure to drop by on Friday, August 22, for their anniversary celebrations! Congratulations!

Moving on to other industry events and parties, it's "Summer Too Hot" at Union Jacks on Friday, August 1. Right back to Union Jacks on Sunday, August 3, for their Metal Night. Three times a charm with '80s Night at Union Jacks on Wednesday, August 13. Believe it or not, this next event isn't at Union Jacks...head to Stars Cabaret (Bridgeport) on Saturday, August 16 for their Golf Pros & Par Mates Party. Next, we have the Black Cat Appreciation Day Party (but like, at night) at Kit Kat Club on Sunday, August 17. Also on Sunday, August 17, it's the Sunday Funday Lowrider Afterparty at Stars Cabaret in Salem.

Back to Union Jacks on Thursday, August 21, for 2000 to 2010: A Decade of Vibes. Then, on Sunday, August 24, it's Hunks (The Show) at Stars Cabaret (Salem). On Tuesday, August 26, it's back to Union Jacks for their '90s Night. Closing out August strong, it's Bike Night (featuring a wet T-shirt contest) at AJ's Gentlemen's Club on Sunday, August 31. Then, Union Jacks will have their End of Summer Slumber Party, also on Sunday, August 31.

Wrapping up events for August, we have a few car, bike, and/or dog washes, so you'll be rollin' clean with a fresh pet all month long! The first is a motorcycle and car wash on Saturday, August 9, at Stars Cabaret (Bridgeport). Next, Devils Point and Lucky Devil Lounge are holding their 19th Annual Bikini Car & Dog Wash on Sunday, August 10, from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m., outside of Lucky Devil Lounge at 633 SE Powell Blvd—a benefit for Array Animal Rescue!

TTFN, my magnificent peeps!

WORLD'S BUTT-UGLIEST ANIMALS

As a species, we tend to regard animals with fondness, or at the very least, with concern. We lavish attention on them, keep them in our homes, in zoos, in protected parks and wilderness preserves. We care about them. Most of them, anyhow. The human tendency to care about animals is largely predicated on how cute or human-like we find them to be. People do not really fancy things which are ugly, or care about them for the most part, unless they are especially tasty. A lot of people do not like snakes, for example. They're not cuddly or fuzzy or human-like. I keep snakes, but I am an outlier case. Putting this into perspective, let us take a look at some of nature's most butt-ugly creatures, and you tell me if they'd be welcome at your dinner table. We're not counting insects or arachnids, as that'd be too easy.

Ranked in no particular order.

Saiga Antelope

When we think of antelope, we think of graceful, bounding creatures that eat grass and run like hell at top speed when any danger is near. This is, indeed, still the case with this one, but it has something to it that puts it on this list. You see, its face, well, its face looks like slender butt cheeks, or maybe some outer labia, maybe like a tiny, naked doll. Either way, this thing is not pretty. Its face is apparently like that because it filters out sand and dust, enabling the antelope to survive comfortably on the steppe, but whoa, at what cost? They are also critically endangered, but because they're ugly, nobody seems to care much.

Star-Nosed Mole

Speaking of animals that have faces that look like unpleasant human body parts, we have the star-nosed mole. Nearly blind, if not completely so, these little mammals rely primarily on their puckered butthole of a face to detect prey, which is insects and earthworms, in the tunnels they dig deep into the Earth. Their poopchute nose is ostensibly one of the most sensitive organs in the entire animal kingdom, being able to detect its dinner via sensing vibrations and changes in the dirt. Despite being another marvel of evolution, it's not gonna get a lot of right swipes on its Tinder.

Goblin Shark

The goblin shark is a seriously wack creature. It's a shark, yes. We know what sharks are and what they do. This guy, however, fulfills the criteria for being a shark and then takes it to another level. When we think of sharks, we think of the great white, like JAWS, but this guy is more humble and far more frightening. Its skin is pink, which is weird enough, and it exists in the deep sea, so you're not likely to ever glimpse one, let alone have it bite your nutsack. However, if you did, you'd find the true horror is its jaw, which launches out of its face like the xenomorph in the movie "Alien."

This guy is really a marvel of ugliness. These sea creatures live on the ocean floor and look like Mr. Magoo, if he were a fish with sharp teeth. However, the blobfish is like your cousin Steve, as it doesn't really do anything. It sits at the bottom of the sea, and just sort of eats whatever happens to float into its mouth. Lazy fucker. They are unique in that they do not have much in the way of bones, and as such, sort of turn into a pile of half-set Jell-O when removed from their habitat, thus the name. PETA is not doing any conservation efforts on this one, for sure.

Babirusa

Imagine a warthog. Imagine that warthog, which is already not the most attractive of species, having several sets of tusks that curve backward like the horns of a ram. It ugghs along and uses these tusks to fight other babirusas over territory and mates, as we all do. Their disturbing existence ranks them a place on this list. Fun facts about them are that their backward-curved tusks, if not snapped during combat, can eventually burrow into their skulls, killing them, albeit slowly. Also, the females only have two teats, whereas regular warthogs have four, and most pigs have between 10 and 14. So, this means you have enough hands to try to squeeze that sweet, sweet hog milk out of them, assuming they do not kill you in the process.

Naked Mole Rat

Despite its name, the naked mole rat is neither a mole nor a rat, and is typically not expected to wear clothes. While it is a rodent, it is more like a porcupine or a Guinea pig than anything else. It is native to East Africa, and lives in a system of burrows with its kin. They are nearly immune to pain, as well as cancer and oxygen deprivation. This hideous rodent is immune to pain and cancer? Well, then. Superb qualities, all, but this does not change the fundamentals. They look like a retired male pornstar's shriveled dong, but with teeth out front. They are of the butt-ugliest animals. Some keep them as pets, even, but why you'd want to do this is beyond me, and this is coming from a man who keeps snakes for fun. Butt-ugly? Nah, withered penis-ugly.

Proboscis Monkey

The proboscis monkey is from Borneo, an Indonesian island. Apparently, Borneo is a large island of conflict, being disputed among several states. The island is home to some familiar apes, such as the auburn-haired orangutan, which, by the way, means "forest person" in Malaysian. But the proboscis monkey, as we call it in the West, is known by the term "dick nose." Because its nose looks like a dick. But its face-cock serves to help the monkey, which I shall mention is not an ape, to find mates and impress them. The biggest nose gets the best of hoos. The orangutans are just sitting there, like, "What is this nose business? Assholes; they're off my Xmas coconut list," but they share the same environment and similar habits.

Aye Aye

Holy shit, we are crossing the Rubicon, here. The aye aye is fugly. It is so beyond ugly, it makes the blobfish blush. Due to evolutionary conditions, our Earth spawned this grotesque weirdo. It's a lemur, of sorts, but when we think of lemurs, we think of those happy ring-tailed guys who jump around and make us wish we worked out more. The aye aye...this fucker is custom-crafted to live in your nightmares. It's more or less harmless to humanity (I hope) and just looks for bugs to eat. That said, they have hideous eyes, yellow like the sun, and an enlarged middle finger to poke grubs and worms out of their safe spaces. They are a purpose-built animal who, thankfully, does not want to conquer the world.

These are the animals I believe to be the ugliest of all. Some may say I am wrong, some may say I am right, and some may pursue a genocidal campaign against them. Not my problem.

I hope you live a good life and do not have to deal with some of these weird-ass and butt-ugly creatures.

THE UGLY STEPSISTER

After a long and drawn-out argument on Reddit about my last review of Sinners (don't bother looking for it, I've already deleted all the comments and flagged the thread as racist, so it got taken down), I realized I'm pretty lonely in my opinions about sex in modern movies. I was in disbelief hearing these keyboard warriors trying to hold up Coogler's movie as some sea change in popular films, bringing sex back into the mainstream. What movie were they watching?! There wasn't even one nipple! I guess you could argue that clothed sex in a movie is better than no sex at all, but come on! Shouldn't we ask more of our big-budget filmmakers? At least one bare ass. Like, actually bare, none of that thong bullshit.

I felt ashamed letting these virtue signalers get to me. After tattling on them and using Reddit's woke police against them (you can get banned for using the word "black" on there), I started scrolling through Mr. Skin to cool down.

Slight spoilers ahead, but I came across a blue-lit, juicy ass, bent over with asshole and hairy pussy lips clearly visible. I was about to report the image for being "real porn" on my favorite website, but then confirmed it was from a normie movie. I figured it was maybe from the '70s, and one of those rad exploitation movies that was only not porn in name. Back when every filmmaker was doing cocaine and orgies.

No, this movie was from this year. A little further digging, and finally, it made sense. This wasn't an American movie—it was foreign! From Sweden or Finland or something.

I try to keep this column about American movies only. Or at least movies in English, since I hate reading subtitles, but I was simply too intrigued by this blue-lit ass.

Once again, I was grossly disappointed by all the usual offerings in the theater. I couldn't even find anything with tits in the bougie art theaters with cocktails. I try to avoid streaming movies, but this was technically a new release and fair game, so I decided to pirate a copy and let her rip. Good lord, I was not disappointed. I oughta review more foreign films! Subtitles be damned, it's not like I'm watching anything for the plot anyway.

Spoilers Ahead!

It took me a while to put it together, but it turns out The Ugly Stepsister is the one from Cinderella. I was confused at first, since the gal we're introduced to in the beginning really isn't all that ugly. Definitely thicc. Maybe the braces are a bit of an eyesore, and then the fake nose, but even with my high standards, I'd deem her fuckable.

There's a whole lot of talking in German or whatever, and castles and reading poetry and other dumb stuff in the beginning, so I was starting to wonder if I was ever going to get my blue-lit ass. Did I pirate the SFW version? Did the American cut get rid of all the good stuff?

Worry not, fellow gooners. The titular ugly stepsister takes off her nightie within the first 30 minutes, and she has some fantastic tits. You don't get to see any vag, the stupid camera angle is just above the first few pubic hairs. If this was a stylistic choice, I disagree with it. Still, A-plus titties, and then she turns around and gives us an eyeful of ass. For those of you who are into the feeder thing and enjoy a tummy, you'll be most pleased. She's hiding food and eating it for some reason, and we get a good shot of her hunched over with her stomach rolls protruding. Not necessarily my favorite thing, but I guarantee someone will jerk it to this.

Turns out the blue ass belongs to the Cinderella character. In what is a way too short sex scene that occurs in the absolute best place to have sex (a fucking barn surrounded by horses), we get to see this perfect blond specimen get railed by the stable boy. We even get a full shot of an erect cock! Can't tell if it was real or not, and after rewinding a few times, I still wasn't certain.

This is one of the forgotten perks of watching movies at home. You can rewind and pause as much as you want! You lose the thrill of masturbating in a theater next to prudes, but give and take.

Back to the awesome barn bang scene, we don't get to see the cumshot, but we do see cum (likely fake, but I'll take it). All in all, it's an outstanding, mostly graphic fuck scene, and I think I'm gonna start looking for new Icelandic films to review. Or wherever this is from.

There's even a second erect cock near the end of the movie, and we almost get to see your naughtiest mommy fetish model about to suck it, but the scene cuts, and later we only see her go down on the bottom of the screen—a la that super disappointing blowjob scene from Blonde.

My only complaint about this movie is that there simply wasn't enough of the good shit that it did have. It was like a perfect rare Porterhouse steak that you only got to take a few bites of before it got taken away. Either way, thank you, Denmark, for keeping clothed sex scenes out of your movies!

HOUSE- HUNTING

ADVENTURES

BY HANNAH ONE CUP

Earlier this year, I shared some information on how far a certain budget could take you in the PNW. It turns out that the variation was wide-ranging based on location, but it was typically situated next to either a demolished lot with a cardboard box that you probably don't own, a boat with a "flat roof" as its main square footage, or an adorable bungalow...in Tacoma. I thought I might throw in some updates and fun facts I've learned while actively house hunting here. It's been eye-opening, that's for sure.

With that, I invite you to live vicariously through one of my misadventures and enjoy the show.

Let's start with the fact that the budget my partner and I have is that of an average two-person household, making average money. Neither of us makes six figures, and we are able to eat out, venture to the beach, and buy decent dog food (for the dogs, not the people). This budget allows us to look at certain kinds of homes, the homelier homes, that require just a bit of tender love and care, and may smell of grandma's smoking habit from 15 years ago. Good bones, but the only real reason you're buying it is because it's what is in your budget, to stop renting, and to have a yard for your two dogs, who eat decent dog food, to have space to run around. Take this into consideration when reading on.

Mistakes Made on My Part:

- Assuming that the photographs are what the house will look like on the inside when you see it in person.

- Basing a lot of my opinion of a house not just on the photographs that have obviously been professionally taken at the proper time of day, but also the lying SOB that created the description of the property. Some people deserve to be slapped in the face.
- Believing that real estate agents are supposed to communicate with each other, but that doesn't have to be the case. Some real estate agents are just assholes who are like, "No comment," when an offer is put through.
- Saying, "It's not that bad" to an odor emitting from the entire house, but coming strongly from upstairs in the primary bedroom. (It's bad. Don't talk yourself into thinking it's not. Remember, there are other fish in the sea and other people selling stupid houses.)
- Not remembering that there are indeed other fish in the sea, and that the first house you see that doesn't smell peculiar is not the only one you'll ever afford that's half decent.

Storytime...and Lessons Learned

Title: The Caution Tape Is Probably Nothing

A quiet drive up through what seemed to be an endless pasture of grass, flowers, and marsh, seemingly misplaced in the city of Portland, would take us up to an even quieter dead-end street with a few houses on the block. Each home seemed to be occupied by tenants who were actively caring for their respective lawns and gardens. An Asian pear tree was out front of the home we would be looking at today. "Wonderful," I say to myself. Asian pears are my favorite.

I had high hopes for this home. The pictures showcased a beautiful, old-fashioned bungalow with plenty of light seeping through the windows. An unfinished basement that brimmed with possibilities, and a welcoming porch, ready for you to relax on...or so the description had read. Walking up to the house was a different story.

We noticed the lawn had not been upkept for some time and was growing brambles around the porch. "No worries," I said to myself, "It's grass. I can deal with that crap." Not only this, but there appeared to be yellow caution tape surrounding my future Porch of Relaxation. "Oh, I wonder what this could be? It's probably nothing. Maybe someone was having a party and just did it for...fun?" The brain will say anything to you to make your dream a reality.

Unfortunately, the porch also had savage bite marks from what appeared to be a dog biting at it, and the inside had an overpowering stench of mold and sweetness. I dared not go into the unwelcoming basement, even though it may have brimmed with "untapped potential." My partner was brave enough to go through both the basement and upstairs, which is where the sweet stench of death was coming from. Someone had obviously just died here in the last couple of weeks.

He said the basement was nice, though. And that no smell of mold existed in that area. I suppose if I could slap the person responsible for the pictures and description, and if I could get over the fact that this home had someone dead in it for an extended period of time, and if I only wanted to live in the basement of this horror house for a bit of time, while it aired out...I would have had a nice piece of property. Out here in this hidden, country area of a sprawling city, where time apparently did stand still, and you were left alone. Until your neighbors smelled your dead, decaying body.

Lessons Learned From This Experience

Lessons varied. It's hard to say if I really learned anything other than relearning the already known fact that people lie, and salespeople especially so. I also learned that it is important to have people you're in touch with, so that you aren't left in a mess like this, and that one person's definition of an "Adorable, relaxing bungalow" is another person's Hell House. I just hope that whoever does become the lucky owner of this adorable bungalow gets a priest in there, as well as some other witches to cleanse the crap out of that house, because it gave everyone, including my realtor, the heebies and the jeebies. I will be keeping track of this house, though...because I do enjoy Asian pears and would like to know if the lucky future owner would be willing to allow me the opportunity to come and eat their fruit. So long as it doesn't grow decaying, rotten fruit like a Hell House would.

Hannah One Cup can be found around various parts of Portland, where questionable people tend to live, because those are her people, and that's where she can afford to live. She's also house hunting, and in each house, she's making notes of whether to return or not, for some reason or other. If said house has a fruit tree, specifically of the pear variety, she will probably be seen on that property multiple times during this year. No, she isn't interested in buying the house; she just wants to eat your fruit.

THEY ARE EVERYWHERE

By Blazer Sparrow

In March of last year, We Are Everywhere, a film by Areem Rose, was screened at Clinton Street Theater. One year later, Rose, along with Cloud Stokely and Nikki Lev, began discussing the idea of hosting "We Are Everywhere Fest," a film and art festival that also featured a pole competition. The film, like the festival, is made by sex workers for sex workers.

Stokely, a featured performer in the film who helped organize the screening, said it was warmly received. "It was encouraging to see the positive response," said Stokely, "...normies seeing sex workers in a real and intimate setting,"

The film followed five different sex workers (including Stokely) who lived and worked through the 2020 COVID-19 pandemic, and highlighted the difficulties of working during this time in an already high-risk field. Although the screening was successful, Rose found difficulty getting the film accepted at film festivals. Not discouraged, Rose decided to do what every artist ends up doing in Portland.

DIY. "If I can't get my film into a festival, I'll just make my own festival," Rose explained.

Inspired by the Sex Worker Film and Arts Festival in San Francisco, Rose thought something similar would fit perfectly in Portland. Anyone reading this magazine is probably aware that Portland has more strip clubs per capita than any other city in America. The last numbers I saw show we have one club for every 11,286 residents. That's more than Las Vegas and New Orleans. By that metric, we definitely have more sex workers per capita than San Francisco, so such a festival seems more than appropriate up on our side of the West Coast.

"Although we have a city where there are so many sex workers and everyone knows a sex worker, there's still a stigma regarding the role," Stokely remarked.

Rose's film addressed this stigma by letting the featured performers tell their stories, showing them as service industry workers, no different than all the bartenders who live here, as well. The organizers hope the festival will further destigmatize the profession by showing the creative side of these folks in the community.

The festival itself is split into three days this month.

The first day, Monday, August 11, is a film festival, once again held at Clinton Street Theater. All the films featured will be made by sex workers, and conclude with another screening of the titular film by Rose. Don't expect all the entries to involve sex work in some fashion, either. One of the films is an adorable documentary about bunnies. There will also be a raffle for gift baskets from various sex worker retail stores, plus coupons for yoga studios and massage companies.

The second day, Tuesday, August 11, is a pole competition. It'll basically be a takeover of Lev's Kit-N-Kaboodle showcase on Tuesdays at Kit Kat Club. Readers of this magazine are probably already familiar with this themed night that champions all body types and genders. When Rose and Stokely brought the idea of the festival to Lev, Kit-N-Kaboodle seemed like the perfect night to host the pole competition day of the festival, since the evening already centered around inclusivity. Toxic, whom I know every reader is at least vaguely familiar with, will be coming down from Seattle to MC the competition. First place will be a cash prize of a thousand dollars, with smaller cash prizes for second and third place.

The third day, Wednesday, August 13, the final night of the festival, is a gallery show featuring 2D and 3D art made exclusively by local sex workers, with a DJ providing music for the showing. The gallery will be hosted at a shared studio space (215 SE Morrison St.) and feature a variety of different pieces.

"Not surprisingly, lots of sex workers are also artists. Who knew?" Lev intoned. There's been much talk of several pieces involving repurposed pleasers. But like the bunny documentary, the art isn't always focused on the job. Expect a variety of installations. There will be some "really, really fun takes blending the sex work persona and the artist persona [of some of the featured artists]," Stokely elaborated.

Like every other artistic endeavor in Portland, this is clearly a labor of love. They pulled it together this year, but if enough of you readers turn up and the festival becomes a success, this power trio is more than happy to make it happen next year and the year after that. "The sky's the limit," says Lev.

Rose intends to keep this festival going every year for at least the next few years, but confessed that they hope to one day take the show on the road. Although Portland is number one, there are sex workers in every city in America, and it's an easy bet that they daylight as artists. (See what I did there?)

But everything starts somewhere, and this one starts on the second Monday of this month. Although it mostly worked to coincide with the night Lev hosts at Kit Kat Club, Lev was also pleased with the festival being held in the beginning of the week. Since this event is also for sex workers, it helps that it's not competing with people's schedules, particularly the big money-making days of Thursday through Sunday.

We Are Everywhere Fest is a three-day event "created by and for sex workers, with the goal of amplifying creative expression, celebrating resilience, and dismantling stigma through public art, film, and movement," says Rose, concerning the festival's mission statement. A reminder that these are members of the community, just like the bartenders, bouncers, and DJs. Not the cops, those are not members of the community. And like every other member of the community that is Portland, they are also artists trying to find their audience. Do 'em a solid and be that audience. After all, they are everywhere. They are right behind you.

Which Rock Band Reunion Can Defeat Oasis?!

By Blazer Sparrow

Sibling rivalry is no match for sibling love. Or millions of dollars (or gold doubloons or tea bags or whatever the fuck they use in England). With Oasis's triumphant return to the stage, these mouthy, drunken mancs have once again disproven the boomers' constant and obnoxious refrain of "rock is dead." Rock is not dead, nor has it ever died, shit just changes, and you're old.

And speaking of old, we are starting to cycle back into that annoying part of music history where we hang onto dinosaurs of the past, as some benchmark to judge all newer acts. Only now the eye-rolling favorites aren't Led Zeppelin and Pink Floyd. It's shit that was big in the '90s and now creeping up into the '00s. Red Hot Chili Peppers and Rage Against The Machine (before they re-rebroke up) are still selling out arenas. Once Radiohead has a new album, they'll sell out a worldwide tour in seconds. The Cure apparently made more money on their last tour than they ever made in their entire career. And these are all bands with dudes in their 50s and 60s.

And what band exemplified the '90s nostalgia gravy train better than Oasis's near-unbelievable reunion? I just watched the footage from their inaugural show for their comeback tour in Cardiff on July 4th (excellent timing, Brothers Gallagher). The crowd looked like a Taylor Swift concert. An entire sea of people screaming along to every word. Numbers don't lie, and this band is at the height of their powers. Every show on the tour is sold out, and they're not even doing anything new. Just a victory lap of all their old hits. They didn't even play any songs released after 2002!

Made me think of what other band could pull off this world-dominating globe-trot. There aren't a lot of rock bands left that could have this effect. Pretty much every band ever has reunited, made their cash grab, and gotten out, so not a lot of rock acts left that could match this hype. If Rage Against The Machine reunited again, it just wouldn't have the same wow factor as the last two times they reunited. Poor Blondie keeps reuniting and keeps cancelling tours because they've done it too many times. You get one shot to come back and have everyone be stoked on it. These five acts could probably do it. Also, it's my birthday, and I'd just like these bands to reunite 'cause I haven't seen them. (Luckily, I saw Oasis in 2005, so I didn't have to spend four grand to see them now).

The Smiths (Two Years Ago)

Ugh, pains me to write this, since this group really missed the boat to bury the hatchet and conquer the world. With Andy Rourke's tragic passing in 2023, it is now definitive that a true Smiths reunion, with all four members, will never be on stage again. I already requested this reunion back when Andy was alive, and I am now regretting not mailing that issue of Exotic to all four members. You blew it, you melancholic mancs! You could've had it all! Anyone at a Morrissey show wishes they were at a Smiths show, and anyone who says otherwise is lying. Johnny Marr is an era-defining guitarist, but I guarantee that anyone seeing his shows now wishes Morrissey was singing over those transcendent riffs. If only Andy hadn't died and everyone had gotten over their shit, this band could've put Oasis's tour to shame.

Sonic Youth

Highly unlikely this will ever happen, what with the marriage dissolution due to infidelity. I wouldn't blame Kim for never wanting to be in the same room as Thurston. Still...if they could just see it as a business relationship. And a hell of a lucrative one! Imagine the demand for the OG independent rock band, especially one where everyone is still alive? To be absolutely clear, I loved Kim Gordon's latest solo album, and I heard her live show was phenomenal. However, I think I, and a lot of other people in the world, would pay top dollar for a chance to see Sonic Youth live (especially for the first time, for all the youngins just getting into them). Speaking of era-defining guitar, name any current guitar-based group that doesn't have a stylistic thread that leads back to this band. The children yearn for noisy off-set guitars!

The White Stripes

Jack White seems to be doing just fine on his own. He is playing arenas (not necessarily selling them out, but he's playing them). He's still an era-defining guitarist and continues to churn out riffage that everyone loves. He also rebranded himself as the "blue guy," rather than the "red and white guy," so kudos for really making an effort to make a clean break from the past. Still, look at his setlists. He closes pretty much every show with "Seven Nation Army." He knows why everyone is at those shows. Can you imagine the global splash it would make if he could coax Meg out of her fortress of solitude? Leaving money on the table, if you ask me.

New Order (With Hooky)

Okay, this one I shoehorned in since New Order very much is not broken up, and you can also see Hooky play New Order and Joy Division songs and smaller venues pretty much year-round. But it's just not the same. I've seen both. New Order was incredible, but Hooky's absence was glaring. The dynamic isn't the same without his bratty, punky flavor. And Hooky does fantastic renditions of both bands' catalogue, but again, it's just an interpretation. Not the real thing. Obviously, Joy Division will never again exist, but New Order does, with all four members still alive. For the love of upstaging Oasis, kiss and make up, and get out there to show who rules the rock kingdom.

Talking Heads

One final ask to these four salty, old bastards. I requested this reunion in a previous issue, and I'm requesting it again, damnit. They're all alive. They haven't toured since 1983 and haven't performed as a group since a one-off in 2003. They are still one of the most influential rock bands of all time. Unlike some of the older dinosaurs, you can still hear their influence in newer acts. They're in their 70s, but I know they can still perform. I saw Jerry Harrison perform the Remain in Light set a few years ago. I've seen footage of David Byrne. I assume Chris and Tina haven't forgotten how to play. The time is now. We know they can stand each other enough to be in the same room together. Now they just need to pick up them sticks.
